Clark's work probes what she "brings back" when diving deep into the abstraction of the seen world and what lies beyond. She has studied extensively with talented artists and teachers in Portland as well as making multiple trips to NYC to study with Graham Nickson and Fran O'Neill. While studying, and prior to being a full time artist, Clark founded and administered a year-round literacy-based program matching high school students as tutors with children who were non-native English speakers, and was also the owner for ten years of a graphic design business. She is oriented towards abstraction in drawing and painting, with an emphasis on mark-making. She continues to experiment with multi-media installations, especially concerning political and social issues.
